Wall Street rose on Tuesday (Dow +0.03%, S&P 500 +0.60%, Nasdaq +1.18%), after the PSE had closed, so it is the overnight signal for today. The desk says the Nasdaq gained on a semiconductor rebound while the Dow retraced from intraday peaks, a sentiment index posted its first monthly gain in four months, and Meta completed a $25B share offering at 5x demand. It also says Anthropic's S-1 registration eased concern over AI spending by showing accelerating revenue growth (single desk line, not verified), and that a sentiment gauge reached 91.7 in October on easing fuel costs (source not named). Asia was mixed on Tuesday: Kuala Lumpur (+0.47%), Australia (+0.25%), Taiwan (+0.12%) and KOSPI (+4.87%, unverified) rose, while Jakarta (−1.99%, sign by continuity), Shanghai (−1.33%), Hang Seng (−0.73%), Vietnam (−0.10%) and Thailand (−0.02%) fell. The desk says South Korean and Japanese equities rose on chipmakers, with MSCI Asia Pacific +0.8% and Samsung and SK Hynix rallying. The Nikkei, SENSEX and Straits Times moves are N/A because their pasted changes do not tie to last edition's levels, and the KOSPI's implied prior also differs from last edition's, so treat its large move as unverified.

The concept. The PSE reports how much foreign investors bought and sold, for the whole market and for each stock. Net foreign flow is foreign buying minus foreign selling: a positive number means foreigners bought more pesos' worth than they sold. The same figures give participation, the share of trading that involved foreigners: (foreign buying + foreign selling) ÷ (2 × total value traded). The total is doubled because every trade has a buyer and a seller, so total value counts each trade on both sides. Net flow shows where foreigners were adding or cutting exposure, but it is not a forecast, and a market-wide figure can hide large offsetting positions in individual stocks.

Foreign activity, Oct 27 (DQR)	Value
Foreign buying / foreign selling	₱6,467.2M / ₱5,957.3M
Net foreign flow (buying − selling)	+₱509.9M (Oct 26: −₱45.1M)
Foreign turnover (buying + selling)	₱12,424.6M
Participation	65.2% = ₱12,424.6M ÷ (2 × ₱9,522.1M); Oct 26: 47%
Six largest net buys (SM, MYNLD, MBT, BDO, PNB, SGP)	+₱744.7M
Six largest net sales (AC, AP, TEL, RLC, DMC, URC)	−₱539.3M
Largest net buy vs largest net sale	SM +₱217.5M (price +6.86%) vs AC −₱167.2M (price +0.38%)

Why it matters today. The +₱509.9M headline is the small difference between two large numbers, so it can swing sharply when a few stocks trade heavily: it was −₱45.1M the day before, when value was ₱5.91B. Under the surface, foreigners were strong buyers of SM and banks and heavy sellers of AC and AP. Flow and price did not always agree: AC was the largest net sale yet still rose 0.38%, while DMC, a ₱48.8M net sale, fell 8.70%. Participation also rose from 47% to 65% as total value climbed from ₱5.91B to ₱9.52B.

How to use it. (1) Look past the headline to the issue-level list of buyers and sellers. (2) Check participation, to see how much of the day's trading foreigners drove. (3) Compare each stock's flow with its price move before reading it as conviction. (4) Treat one day as a data point, not a trend. Takeaway: net foreign flow tells you whether foreigners were net buyers or sellers; the issue-level detail tells you in what, and the price tells you whether it mattered.
