GLOBAL MARKETS

Asia traded lower on Thursday, Nov 12, on a technology sell-off. The desk attributes the weakness to the sell-off in global tech stocks after Nvidia's leadership change and to growing expectations of a US Fed rate hike. Taiwan fell 2.63% to 43,091.87, also hit by remarks from Chinese President Xi Jinping reiterating Beijing's willingness to hold unification talks; Hang Seng fell 1.26%, the Nikkei 0.70%, Shanghai 0.67%, Malaysia 0.58% and Singapore 0.13%, while Jakarta (+2.66% to 5,250.90) was the standout and the SENSEX was flat (+0.04%). The PSEi (−0.57%) fell in line with the region. On Wall Street, the Dow fell 0.36% to 52,297.09, the S&P 500 0.35% to 7,592.40 and the Nasdaq 0.39% to 25,366.09 (the desk did not mark close or live). A desk note says US stocks reversed midday gains to trade lower in the final hour after Nvidia's CEO resigned, halting a technology-driven rally and hitting chipmakers and hardware suppliers. Nvidia: the company's Form 8-K says Jensen Huang resigned as president, CEO and a director effective immediately (announced Nov 12), CFO Colette Kress is interim CEO while remaining CFO, and Harvey C. Jones becomes the first board chair; the board expects operations, customer commitments and the product roadmap to continue without interruption, and Q3 fiscal 2027 results are still scheduled for Nov 17. The filing states no reason for the resignation; the desk's notes cite a board investigation and press allegations that we have not verified and do not repeat.

PHILIPPINES STRATEGY

A second straight loss, broad and lopsided: 131 stocks fell against 41 that rose, and foreigners bought anyway. The index lost 32.65 points to 5,660.55 and the equal-weighted PSEi-30 fell 1.02%, with Mining & Oil (−3.91%) the weakest sector. Net foreign flow was +₱328.6M for a second day, but it was concentrated: GCASH alone drew ₱271.0M (₱613.6M over three days) and AC ₱93.9M, much of it against ₱814M of block trades. Turnover rose 23.7% to ₱7.52B as ICT traded ₱2.45B (33%) while unchanged at ₱780.00.

What the tape shows

- The index is testing support. The PSEi closed at 5,660.55, below the Nov 9 close (5,677.92, now resistance) and above the Nov 10 low (5,634.65), its lowest close since Nov 3. It never rose above 5,685.71 and fell 1.44% below the prior close at the low before recovering part of the loss.
- Breadth is the weak spot. All six sectors fell, 21 of the PSEi-30 declined, and the DivY 20 (−1.36%) and MidCap 20 (−1.59%) fell more than the PSEi-30 (−1.02%); only SMC (+4.10%), CBC (+4.06%) and URC (+1.13%) gained more than 1% among the PSEi-30.
- Blocks carried the turnover. AC's ₱314.8M, ICT's ₱307.2M and MEG's ₱144.3M prints were 94% of the ₱813.9M block value (10.8% of the day's value, against ₱596.2M on Nov 11); the top 10 issues were 72.8% of the ₱7.52B.
- Earnings were mixed to soft. PLDT's 9M reported net income fell 13.5%, and BusinessWorld headlines show Ayala Corp's nine-month core profit down 6%, Cebu Pacific swinging to a ₱6.93B Q3 loss on fuel and forex pressures and FDC's profit down 6.1%, against gains at Alliance Global (income +18%), Puregold (9M +18.8%), First Gen (Q3 +29%) and LT Group (9M +16%, desk).
- Macro and global (desk): the desk's macro cell was blank. Asia fell on the Nvidia leadership change and Fed-hike expectations; the US 10-year yield is 5.126% and the peso weakened to about 63.68 per dollar. Nvidia reports on Nov 17.

Risks to watch (desk items, not verified)

- US yields and the Fed: growing expectations of a Fed rate hike, a US 10-year at 5.126% and a weaker peso keep pressure on foreign appetite for the PSE.
- Global tech sentiment: Nvidia's leadership change and its Nov 17 results could keep technology stocks volatile; Taiwan fell 2.63% and Asian tech sold off.
- Earnings quality: PLDT's lower 2026 core-profit outlook and late Form 20-F filing, Ayala Corp's lower core profit and Cebu Pacific's loss add to the weak growth backdrop (Q3 GDP of 2.1%, per earlier desk notes).
- Mining & Oil: a 3.91% sector fall with AT and PX each down about 7% leaves the group the market's weakest.

LEARN — READING A PRICE TARGET

The concept. A target price is an analyst's estimate of what a share should be worth, usually over the next 12 months. Upside is the target divided by today's price, minus one. A target is a view of value, not a forecast of the path: a stock can fall well below its target on the way, as ICT did today, trading as low as ₱749.00 before closing at ₱780.00. A consensus target averages several analysts; the high and low targets show how much they disagree.

Worked example (desk posts; MarketScreener)	Figure	Arithmetic
ICT: post target ₱1,100.00 vs ₱780.00 close	+41.0%	1,100 ÷ 780 − 1 (analyst not named in the post)

TEL: highest target ₱2,000.00	+84.5%	2,000 ÷ 1,084 − 1
TEL: lowest target ₱900.00	−17.0%	900 ÷ 1,084 − 1
TEL price move on the day	−2.69%	₱1,114.00 to ₱1,084.00

Why it matters today. TEL's consensus implies 43.6% upside, yet the analysts' own range runs from 17.0% below to 84.5% above today's close, and the stock fell 2.69% after a 13.5% drop in nine-month net income and a late Form 20-F notice. The consensus figure was saved from a page dated Oct 15, so it predates those results: a target is only as current as the earnings estimates behind it. A target of 40% upside on ICT or CBC from an unnamed source tells you less than the same figure from a named analyst with a date.

How to use it. (1) Ask who set the target, when, and over what horizon. (2) Look at the range, not just the average: a wide gap between high and low means low conviction. (3) Check whether the estimates have been updated since the latest results. (4) Compare the upside with the risks you can name, such as earnings, rates and flows. Takeaway: a target price is a starting point for your own assessment, never a stop level or a promise.
