The Nasdaq led gains on Friday, surging 1.7% to a new record at 26,247, fueled by a massive semiconductor rally as the SOX index surged 5.5%. Intel soared 19% to ~$131 after Apple and Intel reached a preliminary agreement for Intel to manufacture some Apple device chips. Micron jumped 15% to ~$700 and AMD climbed 10% to ~$421. The S&P 500 also closed at an all-time high at 7,399 (+0.84%). The Dow edged up 0.02% to 49,609. The catalyst: the April US employment report showed 115,000 jobs added, significantly better than economist expectations, easing fears that the Iran war energy shock would derail US growth.

President Trump announced a three-day, US-brokered ceasefire in the Russia-Ukraine war (May 9–11), featuring a “suspension of all kinetic activity” and a 1,000-prisoner exchange. On Iran, as of early Sunday Tehran had not publicly accepted Trump’s Hormuz proposal — the plan would let passage through the waterway resume in exchange for ending the US blockade on Iranian ports. Tehran said the proposal was still “under review.” Oil edged lower: Brent at $101.29 (-1.01%), WTI at $95.32 (-1.05%).

Gold climbed back above a key trend line: $4,731/oz (+0.55%). Near-term support at $4,680–4,700; psychological resistance at $5,000. Silver surged 3.8% to $80.87. US national debt hit $38.93 trillion as of May 8 — the Iran conflict has already cost ~$25 billion in just its first two months. Jane Street Group reported a record $16.1 billion in net trading revenue for Q1 2026, up from $8 billion in Q1 2025.

Trump urged the public to “go out and buy a Dell computer” on May 9; Dell shares surged 14.6% to all-time highs. Asian markets were mostly closed for weekend; the PSEi fell 1.21% on Friday to 5,961 after a strong Wednesday (+1.12% to 6,034). Most regional exchanges carried over Thursday’s session closes into Monday.

Philippine peso at ₱60.52/$. Philippines’ blistering summer continues to strain power grids amid the Hormuz energy crisis. Many Filipinos surviving on minimum wage are questioning government officials earning ₱30–52 million yearly amid rising national debt and corruption concerns.
